- Poisoning risk increases as children are home around the clock
  While families shelter-in-place, children and teenagers are more likely to access medications. All medications should be stored out of the reach and sight of children and teenagers. Hand sanitizers should also be stored up and away from children. A child can get alcohol poisoning from drinking even a small amount of hand sanitizer. From 2011-2015, U.S. poison control centers received 85,000 calls about hand sanitizer poisonings in children. If a child accidentally takes unauthorized medications or drinks hand sanitizer, call the Poison Help hotline at 1(800) 222-1222. Learn more about how to keep children safe by storing medications properly at the Up and Away and Out of Sight campaign upandaway.org.
